

A TV Fight

It was Friday afternoon. Ricky watched an interesting pet show after school. He felt excited. He jumped up and down. He said, 'This pet show is so interesting!' He watched the pet show every day.

At that moment, Ricky's sister, May went home. She also wanted to watch TV. She wanted to watch a sports programme. She wanted to watch the football match. She thought it was exciting. She asked, 'Please give me the remote control. I don't want to miss the football match.' Ricky disagreed. He yelled, 'I don't want to give you the remote control! The football match is boring!' They argued with each other and hated each other. May wanted to change the channel.

Suddenly, Ricky's mum went home. She saw Ricky and May arguing with each other. She said, 'Let's find a TV programme that we all like to watch!' Ricky and May stopped arguing and they started to talk about what TV programme they both liked to watch.

In the end, Ricky and May agreed to watch the game show together. It was exciting. They both liked it. They learnt that finding solutions was better than arguing with others.
